Three-year-old sees dad gunned down

MATT KIELTYKA
QMI Agency

Homicide investigators say a three-year-old boy's life was put at risk as his father was shot dead in New Westminster Monday night.

Nelson Ramirez Guerrero, 33, is dead after a gunman approached his vehicle and opened fire near the intersection of 10th Street and Cornwall Street around 8 p.m.

Police were not only shocked to find the victim's dead body outside his car when they arrived on scene, but were flabbergasted when they found the toddler sitting in the back of the shot-up car.

"The victim was dropping his son off at his mother's residence when the shooting occurred," said Integrated Homicide Investigation

« To kill somebody is atrocious ... but to do it when there's a small child in the vehicle is just absolutely, without a doubt, unacceptable. »

— IHIT spokesperson Cpl. Dale Carr

Team spokesperson Cpl. Dale Carr. "Thankfully, he was not harmed in the gun battle."

Carr hopes the shocking circumstances spur the community into action.

"To kill somebody is atrocious ... but to do it when there's a small child in the vehicle is just absolutely, without a doubt, unacceptable," he said. "This little boy came very close to being actually involved in the homicide. [The community] needs to step up and come forward with any information."

Carr said investigators have "no doubt" the 33-year-old father was the victim of a targeted hit.

"The killer was here to kill Mr. Ramirez," he said.

Ramirez isn't known to local authorities, but has been convicted of fraud in the U.S.

Investigators are trying to delve into Ramirez's local connections to see if he has any links to organized crime.

"Whether he's involved in drugs, gangs, organized crime ... we just don't know," Carr said.

Anyone with information is asked to call the IHIT tip line at 1-877-551-IHIT or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-222-TIPS.

Native kids face huge risks: B.C. rep

SANDY BUEMANN
QMI Agency

The plight of aboriginal children in B.C. amounts to a "humanitarian crisis," according to B.C.'s Representative for Children and Youth.

"They are just not doing as well in school, their health, their family well-being, their housing situation," said Mary Ellen Turpel-Lafond, who spoke on the issue at UBC on Tuesday.

There are many systemic changes that place children at risk from the get-go, she said.

However, according to a 2006 Statistics Canada study,

« [Aboriginal children] are just not doing as well in school, their health, their family well-being, their housing situation. »

— Mary Ellen Turpel-Lafond

aboriginal children ages six to 14 living off reserve were as likely as their peers to be doing well in school. The results were based on the parents' knowledge of their child's schoolwork, including report cards.

The same year saw 49 per cent of off-reserve aboriginal children under six living in low-income families.

Turpel-Lafond said she has seen children living in overcrowded, noisy homes and infants getting passed "from parent to grandparent to auntie to child welfare system."

She said many of these issues are federal and an independent statutory officer is needed in the Parliament of Canada to promote better outcomes for aboriginal children.

Righting this injustice could be as simple as making sure aboriginal children have enough fruit and vegetables to eat or that they come to school well rested, according to Turpel-Lafond.

She said this disparity comes from systemic racism and the legacy of aboriginal reserves, adding that there are low expectations placed on aboriginal children.

"The first thing is to really norm excellence for aboriginal children, to assume that they can learn and achieve like everyone else at a high standard."

Don't leave it to discretion

With more than 2,500 people in the province already ticketed and towed, and projected provincial revenues of $10-20 million in fines, you'd think the province would be celebrating their new drinking and driving policy. Their new law allows police at roadside to seize cars and issue thousands in fines without judicial oversight. It has been a massive success.

Maybe too successful.

Yesterday, Solicitor General Rich Coleman begged police forces to use more "discretion" in applying the law. "You give someone a new tool," he commented, "and they think they have to use it." With thousands of scofflaws identified in just the first few weeks of implementation and front page headlines about a drunk driver who killed a beautiful four-year-old girl in the same week, you'd think the issue would be a political gold mine for the governing party. It hasn't been.

The restaurant industry is annoyed that customers have no idea what the new .05 blood alcohol standard means, and as a result, they aren't enjoying a glass of wine with dinner. The civil libertarians are annoyed the new law applies criminal penalties without independent oversight of potential police abuses or mistakes. Even the police are annoyed, with the head of the police association saying that police don't want to be judge, jury and executioner; that the law is wasting police time with volumes of paperwork; and that the law isn't catching those that are causing the death and destruction.

The Solicitor General concedes the law may need some tweaking.

Unfortunately, the solution the Solicitor General presents to solve the problem of the law working exactly as planned is asking police to use "discretion" in applying the law. In other words, exactly the opposite of what is fair, just and right under our legal system.

By not articulating what the rules are that let one .05 driver drive away, and another face thousands of dollars in fines, fees and a tow, the government is opening the door to selective enforcement. Each officer will have his or her own "discretionary" test: This driver is only two blocks from home; or would likely lose her job if her car is impounded; or is only at .05 instead of .06; or is polite and apologetic; or wasn't speeding; or found her insurance and registration documents quickly; or didn't have any problematic messages from other police officers recorded in the police database.

Watch out, those who are rude or abrupt; those are insufficiently deferential to the authority of a traffic constable; and those who are pulled over disproportionately in the first place by police, namely black people, aboriginal people, people who drive flashy cars and young people. You're about to find out what it means when discretion is exercised. As if you didn't already know.

If the law isn't working, it needs to be changed. Asking police to change the law on the fly, with each officer applying a different "discretionary" standard, is not the answer.

More than 1,000 buses from around North America used at the 2010 Winter Olympics and Paralympics were driven a combined 5.1 million kilometres to and from Vancouver.

British Columbia Passenger Transportation Branch temporary licence records obtained by 24hours via Freedom of Information show that VANOC charter bus contractor Gameday Management Group of Orlando, Fla., formed a mostly diesel, mostly American fleet to shuttle athletes, sponsors, dignitaries, media, workers and spectators in February and March.

Numerous companies still owed their final payments await the results of this week's mediation between VANOC and Gameday, which claims it's owed $10 million. Taxpayers bailed out VANOC for at least $80 million and could be on the hook for more.

Using the list of companies and their addresses, 24 hours measured the round-trip distances using Google Maps and found the 1,112 buses went 5,106,618.2 km, or a total of 127 trips around the equator.

Edison Transportation, a Florida Gameday affiliate, procured 303 used transit buses from Shuttle Bus Leasing of Riverside, Calif., and drove them north to Lynden, Wash., then onward to Vancouver. Those buses would have traveled 791,436 km round-trip.

A group of 44 companies under the banner of Alabama-based International Trailways provided 409 vehicles that were driven a combined 3,454,472 km from their headquarters to Vancouver and back, according to a Feb. 14 list. Lewis Stages of Salt Lake City sent 37 buses, the most of any operator, for a total 115,292 km.

Universal Coach Lines of Richmond (20 buses) and West Coast Sightseeing of Burnaby (18) were the only double-digit providers from the host province. The 263 vehicles from a list of 32 Canadian companies on a Jan. 26 list traveled 1,361,822.4 km.

VANOC urgently sought more buses from around the continent after reports of breakdowns. Two dozen companies on a Feb. 20 list sent 95 vehicles that went 290,323.8 km.

The documents do not show how far the buses went while in the city during the Games. Bill Pippin, president of Cowtown Charters in Fort Worth, Texas, said his buses ran between 3,500 and 7,000 local miles.

In a 2009 interview, VANOC executive vice-president Terry Wright said there was a "comprehensive offering to the Canadian industry" but "in Torino they brought buses from all over Europe; in Salt Lake, all over North America."

"These were supposed to be the 'greenest Games ever,'" said Olympic critic and Five Ring Circus author Chris Shaw. "What a joke."

Missing mace

DHARM MAKWANA

Vancouver's Seaforth Highlanders are pleading for the return of its century-old ceremonial mace in time for Remembrance Day.

The five-foot-tall baton, topped by a bronze bell, was stolen Oct. 29 at Queens Park Arena in New Westminster. The drum major responsible for the ceremonial staff had stored the mace inside his red SUV, which was the target of the theft.

"Its loss is very saddening, very disheartening," said Lt.-Col. Paul Ursich. "It's such a public part of the regiment itself. Everyone is feeling low."

The commanding officer said the mace is the only item still in active use from the formation of the military unit in 1910.

« Its loss is very saddening, very disheartening »

— Lt. Col. Paul Ursich

"That's really the only constant we've got," he explained.

The regiment will march on Remembrance Day without mace for the first time in recent history.

The loss of the mace is not covered by insurance, but Lt.-Col. Ursich said it could be replaced if necessary.

Anyone who has the mace or knows of its whereabouts is asked to contact Vancouver's Seaforth Highlanders or a municipal police department.

Coleman a maybe and Strahl not

BOB MACKIN
QMI Agency

Solicitor General Rich Coleman could be mulling a run for the premiership, but federal Transport Minister Chuck Strahl says he's busy enough with his new job.

They appeared together at a Canada Place news conference Tuesday afternoon to announce $8.8 million for dike and pumping station projects on B.C. rivers.

When asked if the two politicians might appear on the ballot at the B.C. Liberal leadership convention in 2011, Coleman said: "I don't know, ask Chuck about that one."

Conservative Strahl said his name was thrown into the race prematurely and light-heartedly by House of Commons seat mate John Baird after Premier Gordon Campbell announced his resignation Oct. 27.

"I just had this assignment given to me in August," Strahl said. "I'm perfectly happy where I'm at and that's where I'm concentrating."

Meanwhile, Coleman said the government won't water-down tougher drunk driving laws, despite worries that fewer people are eating out or buying booze at restaurants and bars. Coleman's portfolio also includes casinos and liquor sales.

"We've seen a drop in the wholesale sales at the Liquor Distribution Branch, what we sell to restaurants and bars," Coleman said. "At the same time the retail sales have gone up slightly. It hasn't affected our fiscal plan. It hasn't affected casinos."

Chinese media access in question

BOB MACKIN
QMI Agency

Immigration and Refugee Board adjudicator Daphne Shaw-Dyck will decide Wednesday afternoon whether to allow reporters to chronicle the case of the masked migrant from China.

Refugee hearings are private unless it's a matter of public interest. The man's lawyer, Dan McLeod, has also requested reporters from three Chinese-Canadian newspapers be excluded because his client and relatives in China could be endangered if sensitive information is published.

Yuezhi Zhao, a Simon Fraser University professor specializing in Chinese media, said Sing Tao, Ming Pao nor World Journal are not known as puppets of the Chinese government.

"These three papers locally and historically have been known to be tied to Taiwan and Hong Kong — the World Journal is anti-communist," Zhao said.

The man McLeod defends belongs to an unidentified organization and wore a disguise to board an Air Canada flight in Hong Kong. He was arrested Oct. 29 by Canada Border Services Agency at Vancouver International Airport.

CBSA is investigating how CNN obtained information about the bizarre incident. David Hutton, executive director of whistleblower advocate Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, said this could be a case of a federal employee trying to expose shoddy public safety procedures.

Hastings park tree planting protest

BOB MACKIN

A dozen Friends of Hastings Park armed with trowels and seedlings took action Tuesday in a symbolic bid to shame city council into rethinking the Pacific National Exhibition master plan.

The citizens' group said the Vision Vancouver majority council is backtracking on promises to increase greenspace if it approves the expansion of Playland and a multipurpose building on Dec. 2.

"There's no reason why the second-oldest, second-largest park in Vancouver should be treated with such disdain and a totally different set of standards," said Friends of Hastings Park spokeswoman Georgina Nicholson.

The temporary stadium at Empire Field was the latest example of the park taking a backseat to business interests, she said.

The citizens' group protests Saturday afternoons at Hastings and Renfrew and is holding a public meeting Nov. 17 at Hastings Community Centre.

Firebomber won't snitch on accomplice

DOUG HEMPSTEAD
QMI Agency

The man who pleaded guilty to arson in the May firebombing of a Glebe RBC branch in Ottawa refuses to rat out his accomplice.

Joseph Roger Clement admitted to being the first of two men to enter the RBC branch late on May 18.

The first man doused the bank with a liquid believed to be gasoline and the second — according to video evidence — threw a Molotov cocktail, starting the blaze.

But Clement's lawyer, Lawrence Greenspon, said his taking responsibility doesn't extend to naming his accomplice.

"He's being dealt with separately and the arrangement on plea is his own responsibility, without providing any information to the police."

Clement, who also pleaded guilty to mischief over $5,000 for vandalizing another RBC branch at 745 Bank St. on Feb. 1, is one of three men implicated in the firebombing.

Charges against co-accused Matthew Morgan-Brown, 32, were stayed due to insufficient evidence.

The third man, Claude Haridge, was a co-accused in the Feb. 1 vandalism case, but was never directly implicated in the May firebombing.

REMEMBERING STORIES OF WARTIME

Reflecting on lost childhood

DOUG HEMPSTEAD

Ted Itani has never been anything but a Canadian.

But in 1942, he and his two brothers, two sisters and parents were kicked out of their humble Vancouver Island home and sent to live in an exhibition barn with others who looked like them.

The Canadian-born Itani is of Japanese ancestry and in the wake of Pearl Harbor, the government of the day decided the 22,000 of them just couldn't be trusted.

Hastings Park was home to the young family for about six weeks, which Itani says seemed like an eternity. The building was similar to the Aberdeen Pavilion, except not as grand.

"Whenever it rained, the smell of manure was incredible and it permeated the entire building."

The camp operation was funded by the sale of the families' properties where the families came from.

He has a handful of memories from before they were forced from their home — picking seashells, playing with hermit crabs and periwinkles.

From Hastings Park the family was sent off to a segregated tent community in Lillooet. Even getting there was humiliating.

"I remember spending days on the train because the townspeople didn't want us off the train," says Itani.

Eventually the tents — little protection against a Canadian winter — were replaced by tar paper shacks.

Itani's doctor told him his osteoporosis is a result of his meagre diet at the time.

Most Second World War stories end with some sort of liberation in 1945 or earlier. But liberation didn't come for Japanese Canadians until April 1, 1949.

OBAMA VISITS JAKARTA

Presidential homecoming

REUTERS — More than 40 years have passed since U.S. President Barack Obama came to Indonesia for the first time, but the memories of his former childhood home came flooding back during a state visit to Jakarta on Tuesday.

Obama received a warm welcome from many locals after spending four years in Jakarta as a child, where his mother married an Indonesian man, though when asked how it felt to be back he said things had changed a lot.

“When I first came here, it was 1967. People were on becaks, which — for those of you who aren’t familiar — is a bicycle-rickshaw thing,” he said.

“If they weren’t in becaks, they were on bemos, which were sort of like little taxis where you stood at the back and it was very crowded,” Obama said, gesturing animatedly and drawing a smile from Indonesian President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono.

“My understanding is that traffic (now) in Jakarta is pretty tough,” he said, before admitting the streets had been cleared for him.

Obama sprinkled a press conference with words in Indonesian and carried on the conversation with Yudhoyono, together with his wife Michelle on her first visit to the country, at a state dinner where he was served his favourite childhood dishes of nasi goreng, bakso and rambutan (fried rice, meatball soup and fruit).

In an after-dinner speech that drew warm applause, he described how his mother, an anthropologist, travelled from village to village by motorbike, and said he was “deeply moved” for a medal presented to him on behalf of his mother for the work she did in the country.

Got Leaves?

How to set out your leaves for City pickup

Until January 31, 2011, Vancouver residents may set out an unlimited amount of leaves for City collection.

Don't forget:

• Fill up your yard trimmings cart (green lid) first.

• If you have additional leaves, use a standard store-bought garbage can or biodegradable paper bags. DO NOT put the leaves in your garbage cart (black lid). No plastic bags will be collected.

• Make sure the leaf cans and bags are placed at least one metre away from your yard trimmings and garbage carts.

• Do not rake or blow your leaves into the street. They can block gutters and street drains or cause accidents.

• Move your vehicle off the street if the City's leaf removal crews post temporary no-parking signs on your block.

ELECTION IN GUINEA

Ethnic tension mounts as Guinea awaits vote results

REUTERS — Crowds gathered in voting precincts around Guinea's capital on Tuesday awaiting election results two days after a presidential run-off election, with supporters of rival candidates betraying hope and frustration.

With the election commission silent on official results, scraps of paper were circulated with unofficial figures, sparking tussles in places, in an apparent tit-for-tat propaganda campaign between the rival camps.

The vote is meant to end nearly two years of military rule in the West African minerals producer, but analysts fear the outcome could trigger clashes between ethnically divided political camps after a turbulent campaign period.

« You can see that people are anxious for results. It has been two days since we voted and we've heard nothing. »

— Etienne Bongoro, Guinean voter

mission,” said Etienne Bongoro, an engineer who joined dozens of supporters of candidate Alpha Conde outside a precinct in Conakry's Miniere neighbourhood.

The stakes are high in the contest pitting Conde against former prime minister Cellou Dallein Diallo, and analysts say the final tally could be close.

A smooth election could shore up fragile gains at stability in a region known as Africa's “coup belt” and close the book on decades of at-times harsh authoritarian rule in the impoverished former French colony.

NO FRIENDS OF PUTIN

PROTEST Police detain activists from the women's rights organization Femen during a protest in front of the police headquarters in Kiev on Tuesday. Police said they would detain six Femen activists who protested topless against a visit by Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin.

Musharraf thinking of comeback

REUTERS — Exiled former Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf, who plans to return home and head a new political party, Tuesday brought the case for his political revival to some of the most influential figures in U.S. foreign policy.

Musharraf told the Council on Foreign Relations in New York he believed he had “an even chance” of returning to political power in his country's 2013 general election and would seek to attract support of those who do not normally vote.

CHINA WARNS OF AMERICAN DESTABILIZATION

U.S. policy winning few friends ahead of G20

REUTERS — China kept up a drumbeat of criticism of U.S. easy money policies on Tuesday, warning two days before a G20 world economic summit that Washington could destabilize the global economy and inflate asset bubbles.

Nearly a week after the U.S. Federal Reserve announced it was going to pump as much as $600 billion into the economy, world leaders continue to bash the plan, saying it will flood global markets with cash without doing much for the U.S. recovery.

President Barack Obama acknowledged in Jakarta that the Group of 20 rich and developing nations "still have a lot of work to do" to ensure balanced global growth.

Without giving names, he complained about countries that are intervening in currency markets to maintain a trade advantage. Later, he said Washington was not trying to contain China's economic growth.

"We want China to succeed and prosper. It's good for the United States if China continues on the path of development," he told a press conference.

Cholera spreads to Haitian capital

REUTERS — A cholera epidemic that has killed nearly 600 people in Haiti has gained a foothold in earthquake-ravaged Port-au-Prince and is expected to spread widely and quickly in the sprawling city of 3 million people, health authorities said Tuesday.

The three-week-old epidemic, which had mostly hit Haiti's rural central regions so far, now menaced crowded slum areas of the capital, as well as tent and tarpaulin camps there housing more than 1.3 million survivors of the Jan. 12 quake.

"The disease has reached the metropolitan area," Gabriel Thimote, the director general of Haiti's health department, told reporters in Port-au-Prince.

DOHERTY MOURNS FATHER'S DEATH

Actress Shannen Doherty is in mourning following the death of her father on Friday. The former Beverly Hills 90210 star's dad John Thomas Doherty, known as Tom, passed away following a long battle with ill health. He was 66. In a statement, she says, "I love him with every inch of my being and cannot imagine life without him." — WENN.COM

Rogen's proposal

Actor Seth Rogen's romantic proposal plans turned into an awkward situation when he realized his actress girlfriend was topless as he nervously fumbled with her engagement ring. The Knocked Up star asked Lauren Miller to marry him in September and admits he had no idea how stressful the magic moment would be. He recalls, "When I got the ring, it was so nerve-wracking, it was like someone gave me a truck load of heroin to hold onto ... I felt like the Feds were gonna kick in my door at any moment ... I had all these plans ... but literally the second I got it I walked right upstairs to where she was to propose to her, but she was in our closet changing, and she was literally only in her under-pants and her boobs were out."

WATSON WASN'T SPOILED WITH GLITZ

Harry Potter star Emma Watson has dispelled the myth she was spoiled for choice of outfits when attending glitzy events in her early teens — insisting she never had a stylist and was forced to borrow outfits from her step-mother. The 20-year-old British actress dreaded walking the red carpet as she was growing up because she didn't have any fancy frocks to wear. Watson admits she would don donations from her relatives or pick out bridesmaid dresses from London department store Harrods as a last-minute alternative. She tells Britain's Vogue magazine, "Everyone imagines stylists were on tap from the studio, but we got nothing. Sometimes I had two days' notice before an event and there was nothing appropriate for a 14 year old to wear."

Preggers Kerr poses nude

Orlando Bloom's pregnant wife Miranda Kerr has followed in the footsteps of Demi Moore and Britney Spears and stripped nude for a new magazine photoshoot. The Victoria's Secret supermodel, who is due early next year, has peeled off her clothes for W magazine's family issue, baring her breasts and rubbing her pregnant belly in a sideways view of her body for the black and white shot. The December publication also features celebrity parents including Madonna and her teenage daughter Lourdes, R&B superstar Usher and his two young sons, and actress Katherine Heigl and adopted baby girl Naleigh. Hollywood star Moore started the expectant and naked trend in 1991, when famed photographer Annie Leibovitz shot her for the cover of Vanity Fair magazine while she was seven months pregnant with her second daughter Scout. Spears stripped off for a similar shoot for Harper's Bazaar in 2006, when she was pregnant with her second son, Jayden James. — WENN.COM

Ramsay pleads with mother-in-law

Gordon Ramsay has continued to air out his family feud in the public eye — the celebrity chef has penned an open letter to his angry mother-in-law pleading with her not to sever ties with his wife and kids. Rumours of a family fallout hit headlines last month when Chris Hutcheson, the father of the Hell's Kitchen star's wife Tana, stepped down as CEO of the celebrity chef's business empire. Hutcheson subsequently went public with his feelings for Ramsay in a British newspaper interview, branding the TV chef "manic." — WENN.COM

Is Diaz and A-Rod romance over?

Cameron Diaz has reportedly ended her romance with baseball star Alex 'A-Rod' Rodriguez. The actress was first rumoured to be dating the sportsman back in February after they were spotted partying together during the Super Bowl festivities. Diaz and Rodriguez's relationship was rumoured to be in trouble last month when the Shrek star was seen enjoying a night out with Glee's Matthew Morrison. — WENN.COM

Sexy Laundry at Gateway Theatre

Racy lingerie and a copy of Sex For Dummies are at the heart of Gateway Theatre's new comedy, Sexy Laundry. The show follows Alice and Henry, a married couple, as they attempt to spice up their relationship during a weekend getaway. Opens Thursday and runs until Nov. 27. Tickets at gatewaytheatre.com — 24 HOURS

Morrison may be pardoned for 'exposure' of '69

Officials in Florida are considering granting Jim Morrison a posthumous pardon to clear his name over indecent exposure charges dating back to 1969. The Doors frontman was convicted of drunkenly exposing himself on stage at a concert in Miami and handed a six month jail term and a $500 fine. He was appealing the sentence when he died of a heart attack in 1971. — WENN.COM

CANADIAN SWEETHEART STARS IN 'MORNING GLORY'

McAdams' Morning just dawning

LIZ BRAUN
QMI Agency

You're going to be seeing a lot of Rachel McAdams. This is a good thing.

McAdams, 32, has just finished filming one movie and has already begun working on the next, and there are two or three others in the pipeline that will keep her front and centre in theatres through 2012.

On Wednesday, when the comedy Morning Glory opens, many are predicting that it will be the film to launch McAdams into the stratosphere.

As Becky Fuller, a bright young producer hoping to fix a stale morning news show, McAdams is the centre of a smart, funny movie about TV and towering egos. And she holds her own in a cast that includes Harrison Ford and Diane Keaton as the cranky, argumentative news anchors McAdams has to whip into shape.

Among those willing to foresee a rosy future for the Canadian actress are all the directors she's worked with recently, including Woody Allen, who directed her in the upcoming Midnight in Paris.

"I knew she was going to be good," said the notoriously finicky filmmaker, "but I didn't realize how good she'd be."

Over the phone from Oklahoma, where she's filming an as-yet-untitled Terrence Malick movie, McAdams says she doesn't focus too much on predictions of fame and fortune.

"I'm really excited about Morning Glory and I really hope it reaches an audience and people enjoy it, because so many people put so much into it. But that's all I'm thinking about," she says. "You never know what's really going to happen."

Fate has been kind to McAdams.

Although she seemed to just suddenly materialize out of nowhere as a flawless and fully formed talent in 2004 — the year of Mean Girls and The Notebook — McAdams was appearing in local theatre productions in her native St. Thomas, Ont., by the time she was 13. The daughter of a nurse and a mover, McAdams studied theatre at York University in Toronto, Ont.

Rachel McAdams plays a bright young morning show producer in Morning Glory, opening Wednesday.

Bush jokes while promoting book

George W. Bush is promoting his book Decision Points.
REUTERS

REUTERS—George W. Bush, promoting his memoir that hit store shelves Tuesday, pronounced himself “through with politics” and defended his decisions as president in a jokey interview with television talk show queen Oprah Winfrey.

“A lot of people didn’t think I could read, much less write,” Bush cracked about his book, Decision Points, during the taped interview in Winfrey’s Chicago studios.

Asked by Winfrey whether he regretted the decision to invade Iraq based on unfounded intelligence that leader Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction, Bush admitted feeling “terrible” and “sickened” about being wrong the weapons, but blamed Hussein. “I’ll tell you what was wrong. Saddam Hussein deceived everybody.

“He didn’t want people to know he did not have them ... which is strange because I made it clear to him to let the (arms) inspectors in or we’ll remove you from power and he didn’t believe me, sadly,” Bush said.

Bush recounted anecdotes from his eight-year presidency and personal asides such as his first full day after departing the world’s most powerful job.

“So, I’m lying on the couch and (wife Laura) walks in and I say ‘free at last,’ and she says ‘you’re free all right, you’re free to do the dishes.’ So I say, ‘You’re talking to the former president, baby,’ and she said, ‘consider (this) your new domestic policy agenda,’” Bush said to laughter.

On a serious note, Bush grew angry when discussing critics that accused him of racism after the government’s admittedly flawed response to the destruction wrought by Hurricane Katrina.

“What really, really irritated me was when they said my response was slow because I was a racist,” Bush said, lamenting what he called the “ugliness of the American political scene.”

Asked to weigh in on politics, Bush demurred, saying he would not “wade back into the swamp.”

“I’m through with politics. It’s hard for people to believe. I’m through,” adding his successor Barack Obama “has his critics, he doesn’t need me opining on everything he does.”

Bush was shown in relaxed moments with his parents at the gested a possible “girl president,” to which her son joked: “Mom, I hope you’re not announcing your candidacy.” Bush said he was family’s Kennebunkport, Me., compound where he and mother Barbara traded good-natured quips. They considered the prospect of a third Bush becoming president and Barbara sugproud of his time as president but looked at it as an important chapter in his life, and not his life. “One of my proudest moments is I didn’t sell my soul for the sake of popularity,” he said.

OPRAH’S ‘OWN’ IN CANADA IN MARCH

TELEVISION Canadian licence-holder Corus Entertainment has announced that the new OWN — which stands for Oprah Winfrey Network — will be available in Canada starting on March 1 next year. That’s two months to the day following the Jan. 1, 2011 debut of OWN in the U.S. To promote OWN prior to the Canadian launch, two current Corus channels — the W Network and VIVA — will air blocks of OWN programming throughout January and February 2011.

GWYNETH PALTROW

Actress-singer is all country at heart

REUTERS — Gwyneth Paltrow is evidently a country girl at heart. The actress, who plays a troubled chanteuse in the new film Country Strong, said at the film's world premiere in Nashville on Monday that she fell in love with the region while shooting the film last year with singer Tim McGraw.

"My dream is to have land somewhere outside of Nashville and have a big organic farm outside of the city."

Her husband's opinion on the pastoral possibility was not known. Chris Martin, the frontman with British rock band Coldplay, was not present at Paltrow's big night. The couple, who will celebrate their seventh wedding anniversary next month, generally do not attend public events together.

Paltrow, instead, walked the red carpet ahead of McGraw and his wife Faith Hill. On the screen, Paltrow plays McGraw's wife. Her character is a major country singer who has had a nervous breakdown; his character is also her manager, and he struggles to launch her comeback.

Paltrow sings in the movie, and will perform the title track at the Country Music Association awards in Nashville next Wednesday.

She admitted to battling some pre-show jitters.

"I actually feel better this week about singing the song on the awards show," Paltrow said. "If I can keep my nerves under control, I can survive it."

She took both guitar and vocal lessons for her new role. Hill marvelled that Paltrow "has so much respect for country music." Singer/songwriters Jim Lauderdale and Lari White appear on screen, while artists on the soundtrack include Trace Adkins, McGraw and Paltrow also contribute a duet track, Me and Tennessee.

Country Strong will open on Dec. 22 in limited release.

➤ This isn't her first gig

Paltrow previously sang in the movie Duets, teaming with Huey Lewis on a cover of the song Cruisin' (2000). — REUTERS

Cold weather cover-ups and slip-offs

MARILYN WETSTON
Special to QMI Agency

Dear Marilyn:

I have fallen in love with sweater “coats” and have enjoyed wearing them up to now.

However, the weather is getting colder and they are not warm enough.

They do not fit under my winter coat and look strange with a short jacket over them.

Is there a way to continue using my stylish sweaters in the winter and look good?

— MYRA

Dear Myra:

Sweater coats are cozy to wear in transitional seasons, but as the temperature drops, Canadians need to adapt and improvise so that these items can be comfortable on our colder days.

You will find that a nylon insulated jacket will slip under your sweaters, capes and light weight jackets and make them wind resistant and warm enough to take you out on the colder days.

In addition, pashmina shawls and heavier scarves will add colour, texture and another layer for warmth.

If you do not own a close-to-the-body insulated jacket already, do not hesitate to add this essential item to your wardrobe.

As a Canadian, you can use this type of nylon quilted jacket on its own all year round and it can serve discreetly as a comfortable liner whenever you need it.

Hot holiday palettes

'Tis the season for Holiday Palettes. That's why this week, the TwistedPanties test-drive team (a.k.a. Sarah Rowland and Stephanie Mattis) beg the question "Why wait till Xmas to glam it up with a hot makeup kit?" After putting countless brands to the test, Canada's hardest working consumer reporters came up with their top five picks.

Sarah Rowland & Stephanie Mattis
twistedpanties.ca

TOP PICK

TOP PICK: HOLIDAY EYES

We both loved the Barocco Trio from Clarins for its beautiful simplicity. Even if makeup isn't your specialty, you can play up your holiday look with this easy-to-use trio. We found the black worked well as a smoky liner or to create definition, while the pure gold worked great as a highlighter or in the inner corners and gold & black marbled combo gave an all-over sexy-eye effect. Clarins Barocco Eye Colour Trio ($40 @ clarins.com)

STEPH'S PICK:
"I'M EVERY WOMAN" KIT

Wow! Contained in one, travel-size case is everything you need to create a multitude of looks. Whether the style you're after is glamorous, fresh, vintage or modern, you will have all the tools and colours right here. The real beauty is that Smashbox donates $1 from every purchase to The Children's Miracle Network. Smashbox Wish for the Perfect Palette ($68 @ smashboxcanada.com)

STEPH'S PICK:
PLAYFUL SAMPLER

Consider this the best way to try them all. Purples, greens, bronzes and coppers – all get together in this on-the-go beauty kit. There are eight colors in total, five darker ones and three perfect for highlighting. It's small enough that I carried it in my evening bag and was able to do touch-ups mid-evening thanks to the handy, self-contained dual brush. Laura Mercier Eye Colour Sampler ($60 @ Holt Renfrew)

SARAH'S PICK:
ECONO
ILLUMINATOR

It lightens, it brightens and it saves you money! To buy all eight of these CARGO shadows plus a blush/bronzer would normally cost $156. And unlike many palettes that skimp on pot sizes, this has substantial portions of every product. It also offers a nice mix of highlighting, defining and accenting colours. So I can go exotic, golden or just plain neutral look – depending on my mood.

Lumieres du Monde by CARGO Cosmetics ($29 @ kissandmakeupstore.com)

SARAH'S PICK:
EVERYDAY
ALL-IN-ONE

With 10 classy neutral shadows and four sophisticated glosses, this virtually bling-free kit is pretty much all you need for day makeup. It's way more compact than packing around several separate eye colours and lipsticks in your purse. So if you're like me and you only like puttin' on the glitz come sun down, then this may be the perfect daytime palette for you. Glamazons need not apply. Bobbi Brown Modern Classic Lip & Eye Palette ($85 @ Holt Renfrew)

LEOPARD AND CHEETAH PRINTS

Animal magnetism

HEATHER TOSKAN
Special to QMI Agency

Look no further than the runways for inspiration if you're wild for fashion. Animal prints are a designer favourite that can be added to your wardrobe in whatever measure in which you feel comfortable.

"I love natural coloured animal prints as they are neutral - always will be, and always have been. Animal prints work in your wardrobe the same way as neutrals do, but with a kick of chic," says New York-based designer Rachel Roy.

Wild cat prints in natural looking tawny and earth tones appear to be first choice among most designers this fall and are followed closely by subdued variations in shades of grey, black and dark blue. Runway inspiration is easy to find, with Gucci, Dolce & Gabbana, Ralph Lauren, Miu Miu and more all shouting out the call of the wild. Spotted prints in combinations such as deep red and black or violet and black are also stylish, as are white and black snow leopard, snow tiger and zebra prints. "The animal print trend really does seem to have nine lives as it has become, and remains, a stylish wardrobe classic," says Shannon Johnson, a spokesperson for Winners.

Goodbye garbage dump, hello garage

Annette McLeod

Woman on Wheels

If you're anything like me, your garage is less car storage and more not-quite-garbage-dump. Mine contains two motorcycles, a bucket of old oil, cat carriers, a lawn-mower, assorted garden implements and a pile of bricks left over from a back patio that was installed some time in the late 1980s.

"That organization has been a growing trend for the last 10 years or so is recognition that we've all accumulated too much stuff," says Aaron Cash, general manager of Garage Living (garageliving.ca), a Toronto-based company that takes such nightmares and turns them into the stuff of dreams.

"We've become a culture surrounded by consumption, but space is finite, and making good use of what you have has become an ongoing concern for many people," he says. "A lot of people are recognizing that putting a focus on storage and organization really helps improve daily life. By reducing clutter, we reduce distractions, and reduce stress."

Cash says having your garage organized by a pro can cost anywhere from about $1,500 to upwards of $100,000. The high end of the spectrum will mean that you just turn your keys over to a professional, go on vacation, and come back to a brand new garage.

If you're doing the job yourself, Cash says, start by deciding what you want the space for. Do you plan to park your car in there? If it's just for storage, you will have a lot more space to work with, and you won't have to worry as much about getting everything off the floor.

Then, categorize your stuff.

"Sort everything into piles: toss, keep, donate. It helps to have someone with you who isn't emotionally attached to any of your stuff. Someone impartial, who isn't afraid to say, 'Do you really need that?'"

Getting rid of the toss pile can be a pain in the butt, but it's a problem you can easily throw money at — and not always a lot of money. If a dedicated junk-removal service is too pricey, check out the local classifieds. Many contain "guy with truck" ads — for a few bucks, you can get some enterprising soul to come by and haul your detritus off for you.

Then, break the stuff you're keeping down further by function: sporting goods, tools, garden stuff, bicycles, kids' stuff, etc., and begin to think about where you're going to put it all.

Check out classified ads for used storage items, such as bike racks, toy bins and shelving, if cost is a concern. If not, just head to your local big-box store with a list of what you need, and even get some help installing it all.

"Living organized means living greener," Cash points out. "Eventually, all that stuff is landfill."

BEST SUV/CUV $35,000 TO $50,000

Edge edges out others

DON'T LET SOMEONE ELSE
TAKE YOUR SEATS

seatstrategy.com

The Kia Sorento has good off-road abilities.

DANIEL BARRON
QMI Agency

There was no shortage of vehicles in the category of Best New SUV/CUV from $35,000 to $50,000 at the Automobile Journalists Association of Canada (AJAC) 2011 Canadian Car of the Year testing.

Ford Edge

The vehicle that manages to edge out the Grand Cherokee and Highlander Hybrid for top spot in the category is the redesigned Ford Edge.

Besides getting an interior and exterior refresh, the optional MyFord Touch system is one of the Edge's highlights.

The Edge performs best on asphalt, with tight, responsive steering and a powerful V6.

Jeep Grand Cherokee

The vehicle with the most buzz is the completely redesigned Jeep Grand Cherokee.

Not only is it a very capable offroader, but it has a dizzying array of high-tech features to go along with its sleek new exterior and upscale interior.

Its as-tested price comes in a smidge under $50,000, which is its biggest disadvantage to budget-minded Canadians.

With an exterior and exterior refresh, the Ford Edge is best in its class.

Toyota Highlander Hybrid

The 2011 Highlander Hybrid gets a new powertrain highlighted by a larger engine that returns better fuel economy despite being more powerful than the outgoing model.

All Highlanders now come standard with three rows of seats, showing that this SUV is aimed more at the driver who sticks to the beaten path.

Kia Sorento

Hyundai's sister company, Kia, has an entry of its own to boast with the newest-generation Sorento.

It has a good mix of both everyday creature comforts including standard Bluetooth, keyless entry and tilt/telescoping steering wheel, and above-average offroad capabilities. Sorentos get all-wheel drive with a lockable centre differential.

Hyundai Santa Fe

The Hyundai Santa Fe doesn't see nearly as dramatic a makeover as the Jeep, but its as-tested price is less than the Grand Cherokee's starting price.

Hyundai is known as an automaker that provides excellent value, and the Santa Fe is no exception. It's a no-nonsense vehicle that provides just about everything a person would be looking for in an SUV.

Quebecer claims WSOP

For several ecstatic minutes, the Rio casino in Las Vegas resembled the Red section at Montreal's Bell Centre as Quebecer Jonathan Duhamel was mobbed by dozens of fans in Canadiens jerseys following his historic poker victory. The 23-year-old became the first Canadian in history to win the World Series of Poker, claiming $8.9 million in prize money Tuesday after finishing off American John Racener. The native of Boucherville, Que., raised both of his fists in victory and let out a scream when he sealed the win. — QMI AGENCY

No coaches challenge

Upon further review, the concept of coaches challenging goal calls has been put on the shelf. Florida Panthers general manager Dale Tallon had been keen on the idea, a concept loosely based on the NFL system of coach's challenges. Unfortunately for him, his push was quickly dismissed by his peers at the NHL GM's meetings in Toronto Tuesday.

Price, Habs blank Canucks

HOSEA CHEUNG

All it took to silence the Canucks imposing offence was Carey Price and a stingy Montreal defence.

The Canadiens goaltender handed Vancouver their first shutout loss of the season Tuesday in a 2-0 win at the Bell Centre, snapping the Canucks six-game winning streak.

Facing a team with 25 goals over their past six games, the Williams Lake, B.C. native made 33 saves, including a stellar pad stop on Jannik Hansen in the dying seconds, for his second shutout of the season.

Price, however, doesn't deserve all the credit.

His Habs teammate blocked 21 shots in front of him and managed to shut down Vancouver's top-ranked powerplay — killing off all four opportunities — in the victory. They also got both their tallies from the blue line.

Andrei Markov gave Montreal an early lead in the first period, jamming the puck past Roberto Luongo for what eventually became the game winner.

Roman Hamrlik doubled the lead in the third on the powerplay, wiring a rebound off the endboards past the Canucks goaltender, who finished with 27 saves. Christian Ehrhoff led both teams with nine shots on net, Sporting an 0-1 record on their road trip, Vancouver play the second game of their away stretch Thursday in Ottawa against the Senators.

The Canucks split the season series against the Sens last season, winning 5-1 at home and losing 3-1 in Ottawa.

Canucks GM Mike Gillis is officially on Twitter.

No truth to the rumours he signed a front-loaded 12-year deal that would see him tweet a ton in first few years and hardly at all in years 11 and 12.

Enter Canucks Twitter aficionado @Artemchubarov who asked the question that trended right across Canada: What would the GM's first tweet be?

@smoothmedia: Now that he's been voted off of Battle of the Blades, I'm considering offering Theo Fleury 20mil over 2 years.

Gillis could bring a cup to this city and we'd still find the need to tell the story of Mats Sundin and the big contract that got away. Fortunately.

@twitchy67: I'm here to interact with fans in a more honest and open forum. I'll be here till someone disagrees with me.

That shouldn't take long on Twitter.

Considering they're back east I'm thinking his first tweet might actually look a little like this.

@GMMikeGillis: I sure hope no one tampers with my twitter account while we're in Toronto.

Ballard sits as Rome impresses

CHRIS STEVENSON
QMI Agency

In the aftermath of their second-round playoff loss to the Chicago Blackhawks, the Vancouver Canucks targeted two areas that needed to be addressed this season.

More depth and quality on the blue line and a restructured third line.

The blue line thing was attacked by signing free agent Dan Hamhuis and trading for Keith Ballard, bringing him over from the Florida Panthers.

The depth thing seems to be working out, though Ballard

« This game is about guys who are playing the best and other guys are playing better than (Ballard). » — Alain Vigneault might not be too happy about it. For the first time in his six-year career, Ballard was a healthy scratch in the Canucks game against the Canadiens Tuesday. Aaron Rome, the 27-year-old trying to make himself a regular, stayed in the lineup as Hamhuis returned from a bruised foot.

Ballard, who didn't have a great year with the Panthers last season, has picked up where he left off and has lost his spot in the lineup. Off-season hip surgery and a concussion earlier this season have not helped. Rome, who played just the 85th game of his NHL career Tuesday, got his shot when Ballard suffered that concussion.

"This game is about guys who are playing the best," said Canucks coach Alain Vigneault, "and other guys are playing better than (Ballard)." Making Ballard and his $4.2

million US salary a healthy scratch is about as controversial as it gets for a Canucks team that went into the game against the Habs riding a six-game winning streak.

Rome was regarded as nothing more than a depth player going into this season, but has earned his ice time and a spot on the Canucks' power play (second unit).

Rome's emergence as a dependable guy is good news for a Canucks team that always seems to blow a few tires on the blue line once the playoffs roll around.

Getting hyped for playoffs

HOSEA CHEUNG
QMI Agency

To say the B.C. Lions are excited for the playoffs is an understatement.

Judging by the lively atmosphere at the club's practice facility Tuesday, the Lions aren't just pumped for Sunday's semi-final game in Saskatchewan against the Roughriders — they're also oozing with confidence.

"We're the team to beat right now. I feel like everyone's afraid of us," said defensive lineman Aaron Hunt, who was a big part of the hooting and hollering after their first practice of the week. "Look at us. We're a very potent team right now."

The enthusiasm is not surprising following an eventful weekend for the Lions, which saw them down the Hamilton Tiger-Cats 23-21 before having to anxiously watch the Roughriders eliminate the Edmonton Eskimos. The combination of results, and a strong second half to their season, sprung the Lions into the final West playoff spot.

"Emotions [are] definitely

« We're the team to beat right now. I feel like everyone's afraid of us. » — Aaron Hunt good, but you got to keep it under control," said rookie linebacker Solomon Elimimian. "We're excited to be here. We feel like our mindsets have been the same. It's been a must-win game the past few weeks."

Heading into Regina, B.C. has momentum on their side. They've won three straight — while the Riders are losers in four of their last five — and have faced the constant threat of elimination over the final stretch to the campaign.

"We've been in do-or-die mode getting to this point anyhow," said quarterback Travis Lulay, who was instrumental in B.C.'s regular season final victory. "We know anything can happen in the playoffs. It doesn't matter how we got here, I don't think anybody else thinks that either."

STAFFORD OUT?

INJURY

Detroit Lions quarterback Matthew Stafford could miss the rest of the season because of his latest shoulder injury. Stafford again injured his right shoulder during Sunday's game against the New York Jets when he landed on it while being tackled after a fourth-quarter scramble. MLive.com reported Tuesday that preliminary tests on Stafford's shoulder revealed a Grade 3 separation, an injury worse than the Grade 2 separation that the second-year signal-caller sustained in the season-opener.

MALARIA SCARE

SICKNESS

Chelsea's Didier Drogba has been treated for malaria but will be fit to face Fulham in English Premier League action Wednesday. "A test showed malaria," Chelsea manager Carlo Ancelotti said. "He lost his condition, he lost power, he missed training. Didier had a difficulty to train because he didn't feel good." While it is a mystery when the Ivory Coast international contracted the illness, it is expected to run its course over the next couple days.
